

To Whom it may concern,

Since the state of Indiana adopted and implemented its "No Call List" consumer privacy law, my household has regained its' peace and quite from incessant annoying telephone sales calls.

Please don't disturb or diminish my state rights by implementing a federal law that might diminish my existing protections.

I understand that you would like to adopt a national standard, but please ensure that the citizens of the state of Indiana maintain their level of protection currently allowed under Indiana law. Just because we enacted out telephone privacy laws first, shouldn't preclude us from a new national standard that would allow more unwanted telemarketing calls than currently allowed under Indiana law.

Please "grandfather" in existing state laws that would take president over a your new national standard in those states who choose to keep their existing laws.

Although I appreciate your concern for a law that would cover the needs of the nation, I voted for my Indiana Attorney General, I didn't vote for a federal bureaucrat.

I used to receive at least 10 unsolicited calls each and every day - now I only get an occasional call for a police fundraiser, or from survey takers. You would not believe the harmony that has been restored to our home.

Please ensure not only my national rights as a citizen, but also maintain my state rights as a citizen.
